

Oh how the mighty fall. In the wake of the #MeToo campaign, over 100 prominent men have been forced to resign positions in industry, entertainment, and sadly in our legislative and judicial branches. Like issues related to race, issues of sexual harassment have not received the attention they deserve. It took a simple social media and a Women's March to reinvigorate a women's movement. Social media action groups like Ultra Violet and March On are bringing women's voices into the political realm and increased the number of women running for office and becoming otherwise politically involved. This is good news for our democracy.

-Karen Richards

"In all societies, both women and men are powerfully conditioned to repress the daily realities (of sexual harassment and workplace glass ceilings) and to collude with the rest of society in keeping these dimensions of shared experiences hidden."

- William Keepin

Would you like a lawsuit with that?

In This Issue

- From the Executive Director
- #MeToo
- Sexual Harassment Laws
- Sexual Harassment in Vermont

Did you know?

The #MeToo movement originated from Tarana Burke, founder of the nonprofit organization, Just Be, Inc.

Through social media, on October 15, 2017 actress Alyssa Milano encouraged women who have been sexually harassed or assaulted to use #MeToo as their (social media) status to bring a 'sense of the magnitude of the problem.'

According to an ABC News-Washington Post poll: 54% of American women experienced "unwanted and inappropriate sexual advances" in their lives; 30% having experienced sexual harassment from male colleagues with 25% from men with influence over their careers.

According to the Governor's Commission on Women's Sexual Harassment In The Workplace Guide, the Vermont Attorney General's office reported settlements and judgments against private employers exceeding $100,000.

In 2016 the EEOC released a study of Harassment In The Workplace finding that 75% of workplace harassment victims experience retaliation after reporting sexual harassment.

In 1994, the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board estimated that as a result of sexual harassment of federal employees, job turnover cost $27.7 million, sick leave $14.9 million, decreased individual productivity $93.7 million, and decreased workgroup productivity $193.8 million totaling a cost of $327.1 million to the federal government.

The EEOC first legally defined sexual harassment in 1980. It said "unwelcome sexual advances or sexualized conduct that affected an individual's work" were grounds for complaint.

#METOO

According to the Daily Beast, since the New York Times first reported allegations of sexual harassment against movie producer, Harvey Weinstein on October 5, 2017, ninety-seven powerful, high profile men and one woman have been "taken down" by the #MeToo Movement.

On October 24, 2017 the CBS news network reported that #MeToo reached 85 countries through social media resulting in 1.7 million tweets with the hashtag. Interestingly, The Telegraph reported that 300,000 of the hashtags were men. The CBS report goes on to further explain that this movement was originally created by Tarana Burke in 2007 as a "catchphrase to be used from survivor to survivor to let folks know that they were not alone and that a movement for radical healing was happening and possible."

Sadly, one of the main reasons that women fail to come forward with complaints is that most end up not being believed, retaliated against or marginalized as a result. This new focus, and the seriousness with which businesses are taking the allegations, will continue to embolden women to come forward and complain in their own workplaces.

Disturbingly on December 19, 2017 NBC news reported that the U.S. Congressional Complaint Office is now 'Stonewalling' on the release of sexual harassment data thus ultimately denying us all the right to know the magnitude of sexual harassment complaints made by Congressional staff or the amount of taxpayer dollars that has been spent to settle or defend the claims.

This movement continues to empower women of all ages and all walks of life to speak out against their perpetrators. To tell their stories. To pull back the curtains that have shrouded their lives in darkness, secrecy and fear, some for many years, others with fresh wounds to heal. Whatever their story, they now know they are not alone, they will no longer be silenced and they certainly will no longer live in a world where sexual harassment and assault are tolerated.

To the men in power, these voices will not be silenced. The women of the world are boldly, clearly and courageously saying that they will no longer live dominated by you nor do they fear you as they undoubtedly now know that they no longer stand alone.

"If I were to remain silent, I'd be guilty of complicity." - Albert Einstein

Photo Credit: Genevieve Winn

Contact Us

Vermont Human Rights Commission

14-16 Baldwin Street
Montpelier, VT 05633-6301

Phone: 802.828.1625

800.416.2010

Fax: 802.828.2481

Email: human.rights@vermont.gov

Visit us on the web at hrc.vermont.gov

There is not much readily available, comprehensive data on sexual harassment kept by Vermont agencies and organizations. Maybe too many of us have little awareness or grow complacent in our thinking that things like sexual harassment don't happen here in 'our' state so we brush allegations aside, point fingers at 'other' state's handling of these matters while neglecting to notice what happens daily in our workplaces, schools, and within our state government.

Whatever the reason, whatever the thinking, sexual harassment is very much alive and well in Vermont. Some may be surprised to know that it remains an issue in the very house our appointed officials come to each year to make the laws set to protect us from these types of things.

Former state Senator Norm McAllister, who was accused of sexual assault and prostitution was removed from his state Senate seat, and found guilty of prostitution, he got no jail time. The message received by not only his accusers, but many women living in Vermont was that telling our stories makes no difference—they would somehow get away with it or convince others we 'wanted' or 'asked' for it.

More recently In April another member of the Vermont Senate was accused of sexual harassment but the details of the accusation and who was involved are being kept confidential by the Vermont Senate's sexual harassment panel based on the current rules and protocols for handling these types of complaints. This incident, with the still very fresh Norm McAllister 'blemish' is certainly gaining the attention of constituents and lawmakers alike. We must be able to trust our appointed officials to make and uphold these very important laws to protect the women in this state from unwanted sexual harassment and that requires a robust policy and more transparency than currently exists.

Thankfully it does seem that the attention, although perhaps not the kind wanted, has brought light to the topic of sexual harassment pushing lawmakers to address sexual harassment within our state systems and hopefully mandate intensive sexual harassment training for all appointed officials, heads of state agencies, departments, and commissions and all they lead. With more transparency and less secrecy, we can together put an end to sexual harassment.

"Not responding is a response— we are equally responsible for what we don't do." - Jonathan Safran Foer

RESOURCES

Vermont Human Rights Commission (state employment)

U.S. Department of Labor Women's Bureau

Governor's Commission on Women

Vermont Attorney General's Office—Civil Rights Unit (private employment)

The Vermont Women's Fund

U.S. Equal Opportunity Commission \(EEOC\)

Vermont Department of Human Resources (state employees)

Vermont Network Against Domestic and Sexual Violence

Vermont Center for Crime Victim Services

Vermont Workers' Center